Appendix A – Definitions

Audiologist – Licensed educators who work in small groups and one-on-one with deaf and hard of hearing students to support achievement in the classroom. Audiologists have highly specialized skill sets that include conducting student hearing assessments and teaching techniques to augment achievement of deaf and hard of hearing students.

Intern – Any assignment in CACTUS can be indicated as an intern assignment. Typically, educators listed as interns have a class assignment consistent with the definition of a regular classroom teacher but they haven't completed their university preparation program. Typically, an intern assignment is a paid teaching position (typically .58) for a full year and the internship takes the place of student teaching.

School Psychologist – Licensed educators who work in small groups and one-on-one with students to assess, provide recommendations for interventions, or provide tutoring in appropriate social behaviors. The students working with psychologists are likely being recommended for services or have individualized education plans (IEP) in accordance with IDEA.

School Social Worker – These are licensed educators with social work degrees, who work hand in hand with a school's special services team, to assist children and their families with school success. Their work includes group instruction on appropriate social skills, conducting home visits, and providing direct assistance to students and their parents. They are the district's or school's liaison to the community, especially focused around health and human services needs.

Speech-Language Pathologist - Licensed educators who work in small groups and one-on-one with students to assist in acquisition of language skills and remedy speech impediments. Services from speech pathologists are required under IDEA, if the child's disability demands such help.
